DIRECTORS' NOTE

KATE CHAMPION & STEVE RODGERS

Almost all of us have had some experience of living with mental health issues, whether it be first hand or through a loved one or friend. It is a recognisable part of being alive and human. Yet we rarely treat it as such a common occurrence. We give our failing bodies far more press than we give our fragile minds.

Every Brilliant Thing takes this subject and gently yet firmly, with pathos and humour, guides us to a place where we can see it for what it is - something to be unashamedly spoken about within the communities we live in.

Every Brilliant Thing is almost not a play. Its form is stripped down to the essentials which allows the simple act of communion with others to define its nature and ultimate purpose.

It doesn't aim to give simple solutions or feel good remedies but instead suggests we deeply consider how we talk about suicide, how we treat the loved ones of someone who has died by suicide, and how the media reports on it.

The lengthy conversations we've shared in the rehearsal room together have deeply informed our interpretation of the piece. The gift of the show is that it is never the same twice yet at its heart never wavers from its purpose.

Through a personal account we are encouraged to be personally accountable.

The list of every brilliant thing is also certainly not given as a solution yet it stands as a beautiful and heartfelt offering by a seven year old to a situation that can't be easily be remedied.

Sometimes the seven year old in us is surprisingly wise.

PERFORMER'S NOTE

KATE MULVANY

Ten years ago, I lost my partner to suicide.

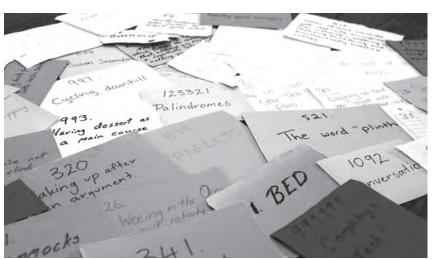

His name was Mark. He was my best mate. My soul mate. My ally. My everything.

His death ripped my world apart. Ripped a lot of people's worlds apart.

The maelstrom of emotion, heartache, trauma and grief that came from Mark's suicide was almost unbearable. Almost unlivable. Along with the traumatic self-questioning that comes from losing a loved one to suicide, I had the added prodding and poking from a press, impatient for information. (Mark was a well-known actor, therefore certain journalists deemed his life and death as "public property".) When I refused to comment on his death – I couldn't, even if I wanted to, such was my state – many publications and programs made up their own stories. Cruel, uninformed, malevolent bullshit. A dangerously one-sided conversation.

The only thing that kept me going, ironically, was Mark, His truth, His legacy, The fact that despite his death at the age of 32, he led a simply remarkable life. He was a beautiful human being ridiculously funny. Mind-blowingly smart. Caramel-hearted. Wicked in the best of ways. He loved stray cats and singing musical numbers at the top of his lungs and farts and astrophysics and the babies of friends. He was brilliant at his work, generous beyond belief, filled to the brim with love and pride for others. He had the most comical knock-knees and the softest brown hair and blue eyes that couldn't lie. When he laughed, and he laughed a lot, it started with a full-voiced "HA!" - which would be punctuated by a thigh slap and hands spread wide in glorious mirth. I loved this man.

Mark also had a mental illness. He often lived with the darkest of shadows within. Anxious voices whispered to him constantly. Utter despair often consumed him, made him disappear for days on end. He was a force of nature, but sometimes the force was too great, too powerful. This was part of Mark. This was another element of who he was. This was still the man I loved dearly.

When Mark died, these were the things—the light and the shadows, the opposing forces within—that I wanted to talk about. I wanted more of that human who was no longer in the world. I wanted to hear stories I hadn't been told. I wanted to sit at someone's feet and hear about my beloved best friend, and about others like him. I wanted to talk and talk and talk so that even if I couldn't work out why the world had lost him the way we had, I could at least rejoice and reminisce and reconcile all that he was when he was alive.

But god it was hard to find people to talk to. Paradoxically, while I was shooing away thoughtless "reporters", I couldn't find anyone to actually talk to. Suicide makes people shut up. Shut down. Through discomfort. Through shame. Through guilt. Through their own grief. Through not having the words. Through fear of saying the wrong thing. When I tried to talk about Mark, often my attempts were seen as me "not dealing with it", or that I'd somehow "lowered the tone". I ended up in many a quiet corner, crying alone. Or whispering to Mark in the dead of night, under my blankets. But eventually I did find my community - the people who were happy to talk about Mark. Who welcomed the dialogue. Those glorious friends and loved ones and strangers that listened as I spoke; and shared their own memories, thoughts and experiences with me. These people truly saved me.

The thing is, talking about suicide; talking about mental illness; checking in on each other; acknowledging the darkness, along with all the light - that's the most important part of understanding our humanity. Of creating a loving community of empathy and compassion. Of taking care of ourselves and each other. Of healing, of asking for help, of offering assistance. It doesn't bring back the person we have lost. But it may help stop losing someone else.

So when this play was put in my hands, it took my breath away. Here was everything I'd ever wanted - an honest. communal conversation between friends and strangers on mental health. With no judgment. No apologies. No demand for answers. No explanations. No speculation. Just a simple exploration of the brilliant things in life, even when there are shadows, even when there is despair. It's a reminder that there are hearts to feel for you, ears to listen to you, minds to assist vou, mouths to converse with you, hands to lead you, arms to hold you, and humans - many, many humans - to walk alongside you as your allies.

Thank you for taking part in this conversation, inside a lived experience, inside a theatre, inside a community, inside a city, inside a country, inside a world, inside humanity.

Like Mark, you are a brilliant, brilliant thing.

I'm so glad you are here.

BELVOIR 🗗

THEATRICALITY. VARIETY OF LIFE. FAITH IN HUMANITY.

Belvoir is a theatre company on a side street in Surry Hills, Sydney. We share our street with a park and a public housing estate, and our theatre is in an old industrial building. It has been, at various times, a garage, a sauce factory, and the Nimrod Theatre. When the theatre was threatened with redevelopment in 1984, over 600 people formed a syndicate to buy the building and save the theatre. More than thirty years later, Belvoir St Theatre continues to be home to one of Australia's most celebrated theatre companies.

In its early years Belvoir was run cooperatively. It later rose to international prominence under first and longest-serving Artistic Director Neil Armfield and continued to be both wildly successful and controversial under Ralph Myers. Belvoir is a traditional home for the great old crafts of acting and storytelling in Australian theatre. It is a platform for voices that won't otherwise be heard. And it is a gathering of outspoken ideals. In short: theatricality, variety of life, and faith in humanity.

At Belvoir we gather the best theatre artists we can find, emerging and established, to realise an annual season of works - new Australian plays, Indigenous works, re-imagined classics and new international writing. Audiences remember many landmark productions including The Drover's Wife,

Angels in America, Brothers Wreck,
The Glass Menagerie, Neighbourhood
Watch, The Wild Duck, Medea, The Diary
of a Madman, Death of a Salesman,
The Blind Giant is Dancing, Hamlet,
Cloudstreet, Aliwa, The Book of Everything,
Keating!, The Exile Trilogy, Exit the King,
The Sapphires, The Rover, Faith Healer,
The Sugar House and many more.

Today, under Artistic Director Eamon Flack and Executive Director Sue Donnelly, Belvoir tours nationally and internationally, and continues to create its own brand of rough magic for new generations of audiences. We are proud to be creating work that speaks to the fullness of life and experience in Australia and abroad, continuing our commitment to deliver diverse stories to diverse audiences.

Belvoir receives government support for its activities from the federal government through the Australia Council and the state government through Create NSW. We also receive philanthropic and corporate support, which we greatly appreciate and welcome.
